PAPYRUS BOATS. Bundles of Papyrus reeds are cut from the shores of Lake Chad and bound together with vines to shape these boats. The natives sit on top of these raft-like boats and propel them by poling and paddling with branches of trees. They do not last more than a few days, but are swift enough to be useful. Such flimsy craft are also made in Abyssinia.

THE ARAB DHOW. There are many varieties of the Arab Dhow with its tall lateen sail. The smaller crafts are used for the illegal slave-running which still lingers on in parts of the Red Sea. These Dhow's have eyes on their prows so that they can "see" their way. They are mostly of shallow draft to negotiate the reefs and shallows of the African coast and Persian Gulf which they frequent.
